

With rising fuel prices
it makes sense to see Australia by other methods other than a caravan or car.
Luxury coach travel is a wonderful alternative!

With fuel prices on the upward trend, one has to sometime rationalise the use of this scarce resource. We all have a role as citizens of the world to make sure that our future generations are left with a planet with adequate minerals and energy.

Our usage of the car has been rationalised since fuel prices hit $1 per litre; we can not afford to be so complacent. Most of us are well aware of the costs of running a vehicle, let alone more than one. For now, more than any time before, we make rational decisions about our travel in regard to needs, and costs.

There are alternatives - walk, ride, share a lift or even take a bus or train. However, when we travel away on holidays in our own country we still believe that the car is the way to go. We argue that, in a big country with enormous distances between outback destinations and no public transport alternatives, we must go by car.

Many of the "baby boomers" generation, purchase a caravan and set off often without doing a budget or evaluating alternative methods of travel. Let us do the sums and compare!

To travel from Sydney to Alice Springs via all the sites that a commercial coach tour would visit, at an average price of diesel fuel of $1.50 per litre, and at a consumption rate of about 5 kms per litre, it would cost over $1200 alone, one way. Compare this to a tour on a luxury coach, with the best accommodation available, all entries and all meals including lunches at the most $1995 per person, one way and you begin to appreciate the value for money of a luxury coach tour. For the difference of $800 per person (less for shorter tour durations) you receive so much more. Consider also that when you travel with a group you share in the fun and enjoy the camaraderie that only group travel generates.

You not only travel faster, hence spend less time on the road, but arrive at your destination refreshed and able to enjoy the varied planned activities, and, most importantly, you see and do more.

There is no better way!!!!!!!
